CLST 450 CITATION AND STYLE GUIDE

The Writing Proficiency (WP) credit designation carries certain requirements and expectations, among which one finds the following statement:

> In writing proficiency courses, students learn the writing style and conventions of their disciplines, as well as the techniques for integrating evidence into scholarly papers.

Every academic discipline has its own writing style and conventions. English, for example, tends to follow the MLA (Modern Language Association) style, while History follows the Chicago or Turabian style, and Biology follows the CBE Manual. Different classical journals and associations use different styles: the main American association, the Society for Classical Studies (formerly the American Philological Association), publishes the Transactions of the American Philological Association (TAPA) and with it the TAPA Style Guide.

This course will follow the style and conventions of the TAPA style; this document outlines important points of that style and gives a few other pointers on good academic prose. Two appendices give you a wealth of abbreviations that you may wish to use.

Primary and Secondary Sources

Primary sources are ancient texts (speeches, histories, dialogues, plays, verses, novels, inscriptions, etc.). They were written in Latin and ancient Greek by ancient Romans and ancient Greeks who lived in antiquity and have been dead for a long time now.

Secondary sources are modern scholarly works (articles, chapters, and monographs) written about ancient texts and the ancient world. Secondary sources interpret primary sources. You want to use recently written secondary sources so that you take the current state of scholarship into consideration: a paper full of references to books written in the seventies will come across as stale and out of touch with modern academic thought. The authors of your secondary sources should still be alive for the most part: try to stick to the twenty-first century as much as possible.

Tertiary sources are compiled from primary and secondary sources. Timelines and encyclopedia entries are tertiary sources. You would never cite a tertiary source in a paper, since they do not provide an in-depth examination of any subject.

When writing a research paper in classics, you write about primary sources by making arguments that also build upon or refute secondary sources. For example, you might write a paper about Vergil's Aeneid (a primary source). In that paper, you would refer to scholarly articles and books (secondary sources) written recently about Vergil's Aeneid, and you would draw upon those secondary sources when making arguments about how to interpret the primary source.

In general, you will want to quote and discuss primary sources, but paraphrase or just briefly mention and discuss secondary sources.

Citations

Classicists now prefer inline citations over footnotes. When giving a simple reference to one text, whether primary or secondary, do not add a footnote, but use the appropriate format from the sections "Parenthetical Citation: Primary Sources" or "Parenthetical Citation: Secondary Sources" below. You will cite your primary and secondary sources differently: you may be used to the format for secondary sources, but the bewildering variety of formats for primary sources is a sin peculiar to classical studies.

Inline Citation: Primary Sources

You should quote or cite passages from primary sources to provide evidence for your arguments. Give the quotation in English enclosed in double quotation marks (remember to put periods or commas inside quotation marks but colons and semicolons outside them); then, in parentheses, cite the source according to the directions below. See the bottom of this section for directions on paraphrasing instead of quoting primary sources.

Classical texts each have their own systems of divisions. Scholars use these as a standard form of citation; do not refer to page numbers of translations of primary sources. Each translation will have different pagination, but the standard citation format for the original text always remains constant: something in Plato Gorgias 447b, regardless of the translation you use, will always be found in a section labelled "447b," although it will occur on a different page in each different translation and sometimes in different editions of the same translation. So, use the standard section numbering for each author, as outlined below.

Furthermore, classicists also abbreviate authors' names and titles of works in citations. You can find the standard abbreviations in the first Appendix to this style guide. Citations with abbreviated author and title names do not require any commas, just periods.

IMPORTANT: Abbreviate the author's name in citations; spell out the author's name if you use it in a sentence, but abbreviate it if it belongs to the citation only. "Lucian wrote many works about cheese," but, "Menippus even speaks with Cerberus (Luc. Dial. mort. 21)." The same applies to titles of books: abbreviate titles in citations, but write them out fully in a sentence.

Stephanus pagination — When referring to Plato or Plutarch, use the title of the work and its Stephanus pagination, which consists of two elements: a number and a lowercase letter between "a" and "e." No space falls between the number and letter. The Stephanus number-letter combination should be written out in the margin of your text. For example, if you wanted to refer to the opening sentence of Plato's Gorgias, you would look to the margin and find 447a written. The next section is 447b, then 447c, and so on until 447e, which comes before 448a; the final sentence of the Gorgias falls in section 527e. When you cite Plato or Plutarch, give the author, title, a space, and the Stephanus number-letter combination.

First sentence of Gorgias:	Pl. Grg. 447a.
Last sentence of Gorgias:	Pl. Grg. 527e.
Plato, Timæus	Pl. Ti.
Plutarch, Life of Lycurgus	Plut. Lyc.

Bekker numbering — This is like Stephanus pagination, but for Aristotle. For example, the Nicomachean Ethics begin in section 1094a, so you would cite:

Arist. Eth. Nic. 1094a.

Other Systems — Each primary source has its own traditional system of citation. These will be relevant to your interests this quarter:

Apollodorus (Apollod.) — Some question whether the Bibliotheca (Bibl.) really belongs to Apollodorus (second century BC) or instead to an unknown author of the first or second century AD, but the work remains traditionally ascribed to him. The Bibliotheca comprises three books; the Epitome (Epit.) presents in digest form seven more sections that likely made up a fourth book.

> Apollodorus Bibl. 3.12.3 tells how the Palladium came to Troy.
> Telegonus arms himself with a spear fashioned from a sting-ray (Apollod. Epit. 7.36).

Dares the Phrygian — Whoever (likely in the fifth century AD) wrote the De excidio Trojæ historia chose for himself the pseudonym of Dares, a Trojan priest mentioned in Homer's Iliad. Few classicists read this author, so neither his name nor that of his work has a standard abbreviation. Luckily, since the De excidio Trojæ historia is the only work attributed to Dares, there is no need to mention the title in a citation, only the section number.

> Dares 44 claims to have written in Greek.
> Æneas had red hair and black eyes (Dares 12).

Dictys of Crete — The six-book Ephemeris belli Trojani seems to be a fourth century AD Latin translation of an earlier Greek work. As with Dares, neither Dictys nor his work has a standard abbreviation, but there is also no need to mention the title in any citation, since only this work is attributed to Dictys. Include the book number and section number.

> Dictys 2.7 claims that Agamemnon held Menelaus responsible for the sacrifice of Iphigenia.
> Philoctetes had not fully recovered but "was still rather sick and walked with difficulty" (Dictys 2.47).

Euripides (Eur.) —The third of the three great Athenian tragedians, Euripides wrote the Hecuba (Hec.), the Helen (Hel.), and the Trojan Women (Tro.). Give the play and line number.

Gorgias (Gorg.) — Gorgias of Leontini (483–376 BC) was a sophist. Of what survives of his work, we shall read the Praise of Helen (Hel.) and the Defense of Palamedes (Pal.). Each work has numbered sections.

> Gorgias Hel. 4 says that Helen possessed "godlike beauty."
> Palamedes defines himself in terms of parents, friends, ancestors, religion, and country (Gorg. Pal. 19).

Guido de Columnis — Guido delle Colonne was a thirteenth century judge in Sicily; in his spare time, he wrote a Historia destructionis Trojæ. Neither the author nor the work has a standard abbreviation. There also is no standard for section numbering, unfortunately: use the book and line numbers given in Meek 1974.

> Medea too is a battleground, but one of emotions: "Love and shame were at war within her" (de Columnis 2.306).

Herodotus (Hdt.) — Herodotus, the first historian, lived in the fifth century BC. Since his only work was the Histories, you do not need to include the title in citations. Give the book number and section number.

> The Persians and Phœnicians told different stories of Helen's abduction (Hdt. 1.5).

Homer (Hom.) — The Iliad (Il.) and Odyssey (Od.) have twenty-four books each, and the books contain many lines. Refer to the book number PERIOD verse:

> "Sing, goddess, the wrath of Achilles" (Hom. Il. 1.1)
> "Tell me, Muse, about the man…" (Hom. Od. 1.1)

Ovid (Ov.) — Ovid (43 BC – 17 AD) seems to have begun publishing shortly after Vergil's death. Of his many works, we are reading the Heroides (Her.), which consists of 21 letters, and the Metamorphoses (Met.) in fifteen books. Give the letter or book number and the line number.

> The theme of "dying well" recurs in Medea's letter to Jason: tum potui Medea mori bene (Ov. Her. 12.7).
> Ovid Met. 10.364 has Myrrha claim to desire a husband "like" her father, although she truly desires her father himself.

Seneca the Elder (Sen.) — The Roman author Seneca (54 BC – AD 39) left us a collection of Latin and Greek quotations, outlines, and explanations of rhetorical exercises called suasoriæ and controversiæ. We read the (very brief) third part of the Suasoriæ (Suas.), so cite as Suas. 3 with the section number after that.

> Cestius Pius remarks that not even Priam would sacrifice his own children (Sen. Suas. 3.2).

Sophocles (Soph.) — The second of the three great Athenian tragedians, Sophocles (Soph.) wrote the Ajax (Aj.) and the Philoctetes (Phil.). Give the play and line number in citations.

> Ajax asks, "What do I do, when I am obviously / hated by the gods?" (Soph. Aj. 539–40).

Vergil (Verg.) — Vergil (70–19 BC) lived during the collapse of the old Roman Republic and the rise of Augustus, under whose patronage Vergil helped define a new golden era of Latin literature. His heroic epic, the Æneid (Aen.), narrated in twelve books the adventures of Æneas, who escaped the fall of Troy and led a small contingent of survivors to Italy. For the Æneid, give the book number and line number.

> Vergil Aen. 7.37–45 again invokes the Muse, as if to signal that the final heptad of books constitutes a second epic beyond the first heptad.
> Erato rather than Calliope sometimes receives the epic poet's attention (cf. Verg. Aen. 7.37–45).

If you paraphrase or discuss instead of quoting from an ancient author, you still need a citation to indicate the source, but you can move it to the front of the sentence and omit information that would be repeated from the context of the sentence. If the author's name appears in the sentence, spell it out fully; if the citation follows the author's name, omit the parentheses.

> Trimalchio confuses Hannibal's adventures and the Trojan War (Petr. Sat. 50).
> Petronius Sat. 50 has Trimalchio confuse Hannibal's adventures and the Trojan War.
> Petronius has Trimalchio confuse Hannibal's adventures and the Trojan War (Sat. 50).

If any part of the citation is identical to the most recent citation in the same paragraph, omit the superfluous information.

> Trimalchio mangles the story of Corinthian Bronze: "I know very well where Corinthian Bronze was first discovered. When Troy was captured, Hannibal…" (Petr. Sat. 50). After the blatant anachronism, he explains that the Hannibal melted all the Trojan statues, made of diverse metals, and mixed them, from which a new alloy was born, "from all into one." Next he tells an impossible story about malleable glass (51).

Note that the paragraph contains three references: first, a direct quotation with a full citation; then a quotation and paraphrase from the same section, which needs no additional citation; finally, a reference to the next section, which needs a section number but not the author's name or book title.

Inline Citation: Secondary Sources

For secondary sources, give the last name of the author (or authors, separated by "and" for two authors or by commas and a final "and" for three or more authors) followed by the year COLON SPACE page number(s). Only include the initial of the author's first name if several authors in your bibliography share the same last name. Otherwise, never refer to the author's first name in a citation. If the author's name appears as a part of the sentence, and the citation immediately follows it, then drop the parentheses; otherwise, you need parentheses around the citation.

> Russell 1967: 136 suggests that the Attic orators were unacquainted with stasis theory.
> Russell suggests that the Attic orators were unacquainted with stasis theory (1967: 136).
> Attic orators were unacquainted with stasis theory (Russell 1967: 136).

If you cite a footnote or endnote, give the page number, the letter "n," and the number of the note, all without intervening spaces or periods.

> Hawkins 2012: 334n14 demolishes the false etymology of salaputium from pūtus.

Avoid quoting secondary sources; you should engage other scholars by paraphrasing or discussing their work, not by repeating or parroting them. Do not cite the same secondary source several times in a row: that means that you have constructed your arguments poorly and rely too much on one or two other scholars.

Footnotes

Footnotes are not for simple references to one source: that is the province of inline citations. Footnotes are where you cite multiple sources or where you explore arguments that are tangental to your thesis. The former is useful, but be careful with the latter. You should be able to justify to yourself (and to me) both

1. why you are including the digression at all, if it has so little to do with your arguments that it does not belong in the main body of your paper; and

2. why you are separating the argument from the rest of your paper by shoving it into a footnote, if you feel that the argument is important enough to keep in your paper.

Consider those two questions when you look at the length of your footnotes as well: if your notes take up a considerable portion of the page, perhaps they contain elements that belong either in the main body of the paper or do not belong anywhere in the paper.

Do not use endnotes. They are hard to read, because one has to flip back and forth between the main text and the notes; footnotes are on the same page as the text to which they refer, which makes life much easier on your reader (me).

Bibliography

The bibliography exists to help scholars keep track of secondary sources. A scholar who finds an article on Juvenal, for example, knows that he or she will find at the end of that article a list of recent articles, chapters and books relevant to the topic of the article. This becomes more helpful the further into your academic career you get.

In your bibliography, list the secondary sources that you cited. Do not list primary sources in the bibliography.

Titles of scholarly works often consist of two parts, a main title (on the top line or before a colon) and a subtitle (on the next line or after a colon).

Full Title: The Ultimate Crime: Parricidium and the Concept of Family in the Late Roman Republic and Early Empire.

Main Title: The Ultimate Crime

Subtitle: Parricidium and the Concept of Family in the Late Roman Republic and Early Empire.

Some more progressive journals only require the main title, eschewing the subtitle. We are not so progressive. Write the full title in the bibliography.

The old rule was that the city of publication was just the city, with no further geographic information. Then America happened, which confused Europeans terribly: now there was a "real" Cambridge (in England, where Cambridge University had its press) and an American Cambridge (Massachusetts, home of Harvard University Press). Moreover, Europeans in general know less about New World geography than they admit, and American place names mean nothing to them. To humor the Europeans, Americans tend to append the postal code for the US state after the city name for all US cities other than New York. This is stupid and pointless (it would make more sense to write the name of the publisher and omit the place of publication), but it is an academic custom, and the nature of academic customs is that they must be followed unquestioningly.

Set up indentation so that the first line is not indented, but subsequent lines get a "hanging" indentation of 0.5" (36 points). In Word, this is

Format > Paragraph > Indents and Spacing > Indentation > Special: Hanging By 0.5"

Alphabetize your bibliography by the (first) author's last name. If you list several works by the same author, put them in reverse chronological order (newest first). If you list two or more works that one author published in the same year, add a letter (a, b, c, etc.) to the year in the bibliography and cite the source in your body text or notes using the year-number combination.

Krause 2015a: 13 p. 13 of the first of several publications by Krause in the year 2015

Krause 2015b: 57 p. 57 of the second of Krause' publications in the year 2015

Monographs

Monographs are books written (-graph) by one (mono-) author. Give the following information:

- Author (last name, initial of first name) PERIOD SPACE
- Year of publication PERIOD SPACE
- Title of monograph, italicized PERIOD SPACE
- If the book is translated: "Trans. by [last name, initial of first name]" PERIOD SPACE
- City of publication COLON SPACE Publisher PERIOD

If there is more than one author, list them separated by the word "and" with the period after the final author.

Example Bibliography

Breitenberger, B. 2007. Aphrodite and Eros. New York: Routledge.

Meyer, E. 2004. Legitimacy and Law in the Roman World. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

de Romilly, J. 1975. Magic and Rhetoric in Ancient Greece. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

Theses and Dissertations

A thesis or dissertation is a monograph written as part of a course of university study. The difference comes in the last bit of the formula: instead of "city: publisher," you get: "document type: university."

- Author (last name, initial of first name) PERIOD SPACE
- Year of publication PERIOD SPACE
- Title of thesis or dissertation, italicized PERIOD SPACE
- "MA Thesis" or "PhD Dissertation" COLON SPACE University PERIOD

Example Bibliography

van Groesen, M. 2007. The De Bry Collection of Voyages (1590-1634): Editorial Strategy and the Representations of the Overseas World. PhD Dissertation: University of Amsterdam.

Watson, T. 2010. The Rhetoric of Corruption in Late Antiquity. PhD Dissertation: University of California Riverside.

Journal Articles

Classicists write briefer bibliographic entries for journal articles than do scholars in other fields, especially the modern languages:

- Author (last name, initial of first name) PERIOD SPACE
- Year of publication PERIOD SPACE
- "Title of article in quotation marks PERIOD" (period goes inside quotation marks) SPACE
- Title of journal, italicized SPACE volume number COLON SPACE page range PERIOD

If there is more than one author, list them separated by the word "and" with the period after the final author. Do not include the edition number with the volume number (with no "vol" or "fasc" abbreviation or anything tacky like that). If you found the article online, do not put its URL or DOI or "Web" or date of access or any of that nonsense: nobody cares where you found the article, just where other people with decent libraries can find it.

Write out (and italicize) the full name of the journal. Many journals now require that authors abbreviate the names of journals using the abbreviations found in L'Année philologique. If a journal is not listed in L'Année philologique, do not attempt to abbreviate it: your reader has probably never heard of that journal before and will need the full name to locate it. You may find the official list in the second appendix to this document.

For you, abbreviation is optional. Your bibliographic entries become mercifully shorter through the magic of abbreviation, but you do not have to take that extra step for this class.

Example Bibliography (without abbreviations)

Conte, G.B. and Most, G. 1989. "Love Without Elegy: the Remedia Amoris and the Logic of a Genre." Poetics Today 10: 441–69.

Ianziti, G. 1998. "Bruni on Writing History." Renaissance Quarterly 51: 367–91.

Lassen, E. 1992. "The Ultimate Crime: Parricidium and the Concept of Family in the Late Roman Republic and Early Empire." Classica Et Mediaevalia 43: 147–61.

Sandy, G. 1974. "Scaenica Petroniana." Transactions of the American Philological Association 104: 329–46.

Example Bibliography (with abbreviations)

Conte, G.B. and Most, G. 1989. "Love Without Elegy: the Remedia Amoris and the Logic of a Genre." Poetics Today 10: 441–69.

Ianziti, G. 1998. "Bruni on Writing History." RenQ 51: 367–91.

Lassen, E. 1992. "The Ultimate Crime: Parricidium and the Concept of Family in the Late Roman Republic and Early Empire." C&M 43: 147–61.

Sandy, G. 1974. "Scaenica Petroniana." TAPA 104: 329–46.

Note that the first entry above (Conte and Most 1989) does not get an abbreviation, because Poetics Today does not appear in L'Année philologique's list of journals.

Chapters in Edited Books

The edited book is a fairly recent phenomenon: instead of submitting articles to peer-reviewed journals, some scholars now get together with others of like interests to publish articles on a common theme together as a book. Often, these "edited books" are spawned from conferences: someone seems to have reinvented the acta or "conference proceedings" and given them a new name. In the twenty-first century, it is unfortunately difficult to find a bibliography that does not include a few of these. Think of the bibliographic format for chapters in edited books as a hybrid of the formats for journal articles and monographs; these are therefore never short entries.

- Author (last name, initial of first name) PERIOD SPACE
- Year of publication PERIOD SPACE
- "Title of chapter in quotation marks PERIOD" (period goes inside quotation marks) SPACE
- "In" and name(s) of editors in the same format as the author's name, followed by "ed" for one editor or "eds" for several editors PERIOD SPACE
- Title of book, italicized PERIOD SPACE
- City of publication COLON SPACE Publisher PERIOD SPACE
- page numbers of article awkwardly dangling off the end PERIOD

Example Bibliography

Tomassi, G.L. 2015. "Tyrants and Tyrannicides: Between Literary Creation and Contemporary Reality in Greek Declamation." In Amato, E., Citti, F. and Huelsenbeck, B. eds. Law and Ethics in Greek and Roman Declamation. Berlin: Walter de Gruyter. 249–67.

Trevor-Roper, H. 1988. "The Invention of Tradition: The Highland Tradition of Scotland." In Hobsbawm, E. and Ranger, T. eds. The Invention of Tradition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. 15–41.

Winterbottom, M. 2003. "Ennodius, Dictio 21." In Schröder, B. and Schröder, J. eds. Studium Declamatorium. Münich: Saur. 275–88.

Other Sources

Do not bother trying to cite Joe Schmo's blog entry about anything. Do not cite (or read) web pages purporting to demonstrate extraterrestrial involvement in the ancient world or that claim to offer insight into ancient society based on the author's personal experiences (however profound they may seem) worshipping the cats of Isis. Find a real source.

Do not try to cite encyclopedias, dictionaries, or similar reference works. They exist to orient you at a shallow ("Powerpoint-Deep," as they say now) level, not to interpret or provide a deep understanding of any subject. Find a real source.

Find a real source. The subject-area librarian in the library will be glad to help you. Always try scholar.google.com and jstor.org (preferably from campus, since more will be available to you from a campus IP address).

General Notes on Style

Contractions

Avoid contractions. Write "he has" instead of "he's," and so forth.

The mark of punctuation called "apostrophe" in English has two uses in academic writing: possession and nested quotation.

Document Header (Title and Author)

Start your paper with your title on the first line, centered, in the same typeface and size as the rest of the paper. Do not italicize the title (but do italicize any titles or foreign words it contains). Capitalize the first letter of any word except articles (a, an, the), monosyllabic coordinating conjunctions (and, or, but), and monosyllabic prepositions (by, for, from, to, and so forth). Always capitalize the first word of the title and the first word after any colon or semicolon.

On the second line, centered immediately under the title, write your name.

Begin your first body paragraph on the next line. Do not write the date, my name, the course number, the section number, your ID number, or any of that other nonsense.

Eras

Many American journals now require the use of CE (Common Era) instead of AD (Anno Domini) and BCE (Before Common Era) instead of BC (Before Christ). For our purposes, feel free to use either the BCE/CE or the BC/AD system, but remain consistent: do not switch systems in the middle of a paper.

Write the era in small caps rather than full capital letters. No periods follow the abbreviations. One space separates the number and the abbreviation.

743 BC (not "743 BC" nor "743 bc"; not "743 B.C." nor "743 BC.")

The BCE and CE abbreviations follow the year:

743 BCE 33 CE

In the traditional system, BC follows the year, but AD always precedes the year:

743 BC AD 33

Hyphenation

Do not turn on hyphenation. Do not break words across two lines: if a full word will not fit on the end of one line, keep it whole and push it to the next line.

Hyphens and Dashes

A hyphen (-) joins two words or morphemes to make one word: "Greco-Roman." The hyphen key (between the zero and the equals sign) on the keyboard produces a hyphen.

An en dash (–) separates the endpoints of a numeric range: "106–43 BC." On a Mac, option+hyphen produces an en dash. In Word on Windows, typing a hyphen between numbers should trigger autocorrect to replace the hyphen with an en dash.

An em dash (—) interrupts a sentence: "Cicero loved soccer—but that is beside the point." On a Mac, shift+option+hyphen produces an em dash. In Word on Windows, typing two hyphens should produce an em dash.

Whitespace neither precedes nor follows any of these marks. You can use all three in the same sentence:

> "Cicero—who lived 106–43 BC—invented the game of Greco-Roman soccer."

Justification

In typography, "justification" means fudging the spacing between words so that each line of text comes out to the same length. Without hyphenation, this looks awful, and Microsoft Word will ensure that your text looks awful even with hyphenation due to its lousy line-breaking algorithm.

Body text should be "ragged right" or "left-aligned" or "flush left" like this document: all lines of text should begin the same distance from the left side of the paper, but they will naturally end at different distances from the right side of the paper, making the right side of the paper look "ragged." The reader's eye uses the different line lengths to track its vertical position on the page, so "ragged right" text is easier to read.

Margins

Use one-inch margins on all four sides of the paper.

Numbers

Do not use Roman numerals. Even in citations, use Arabic numerals for all numbers:

> Cic. Rep. 1.26.

In body text, write out as words any number whose corresponding word is only one word long:

> one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty.

Use Arabic numerals for any number longer than one word (but see the following for exceptions):

> 21 (not "twenty-one"), 22 (not "twenty-two"), 99 (not "ninety-nine").

Write out the names of decades and centuries:

> The twenty-first century was a time of despair for the Romans.
> In the sixties and seventies, classicists wrote on typewriters instead of laptops.

Write out as a word any number that begins a sentence:

> Augustus had 99 problems, but Ovid did not number among them.
> Ninety-nine problems beset Augustus, but Ovid did not number among them.

Use a comma to separate the hundreds and thousands places in numbers that are not years or page numbers. Do not use commas in writing years and page numbers:

> I received 1,776 pieces of coal for Christmas.
> The world began in AD 1776.

Numeric Ranges

When writing numeric ranges like page numbers, follow these rules:

1. Always write the ones and tens digit (note: the real TAPA rules are a bit more complex).

2. Only write the hundreds digit of the ending number if it differs from the hundreds digit of the beginning number. Do not write the hundreds digit of the ending number if it is the same as the hundreds digit of the beginning number.

from 110 to 220:	110–220
from 110 to 120:	110–20	(not 110–120)
from 110 to 115:	110–15	(not 110–5 nor 110–115)

Passive Voice

Good Latin and Greek authors love the passive voice, but good English authors avoid it. In an active sentence, the subject does some action; in a passive voice, something is done to the subject.

Popilius betrays Cicero.	Active: subject (Popilius) does the action
Cicero is betrayed by Popilius.	Passive: subject (Cicero) does not do anything

Passive sentences are longer, more complex, and weaker than active sentences. You want to write strong, brief, straightforward sentences.

The passive voice has only one redeeming virtue in English: it allows you to omit or hide the agent of some action. That may be useful in politics or other fields that encourage one to dodge responsibility, but academic writing requires you to attribute responsibility whenever possible.

Quote and Quotation

"Quote" is a verb, not a noun. "Quotation" is the noun for something one quotes.

He quotes three lines from Juvenal.

The quotation highlights Horace' subtle wit.

wrong: *This quote highlights Horace' subtle wit. // "quote" is not a noun

Spacing

Double-space the body text of your paper. Footnotes and the bibliography may have single spacing, but you must double-space the body of the paper.

Typeface

Use only twelve-point Times or Times New Roman.

Do not use bold text anywhere. Do not underline anything.

Italicize titles of books and journals. Italicize foreign words when written in the Latin (English) alphabet.

He wrote about philotimia.	(foreign, Latin alphabet—italicized)
He wrote about φιλοτιμία.	(Greek alphabet—not italicized)

LISTE
DES PÉRIODIQUES DÉPOUILLÉS

Cette liste comprend non seulement les périodiques dépouillés pour le présent volume mais aussi ceux qui, en raison des circonstances, n'ont pu l'être dès leur parution et dont les articles seront analysés dans un volume ultérieur. On voudra bien noter que certains titres, qui ont peut-être cessé de paraître, ont été maintenus, faute d'informations précises à leur sujet.

Pour les périodiques disponibles uniquement sur l'Internet, nous n'avons indiqué que l'adresse institutionnelle, l'adresse électronique pouvant changer à tout moment.
